

In 1960, spending on housing, healthcare and tuition made up 22% of consumer spending for the average US household. Today those spending categories make up 37%.

Housing (including utilities), healthcare services and education services spending share of total personal consumption expenditure

